POEMS,

BY

HELEN MARIA WILLIAMS.

IN TWO VOLUMES.

VOL. II.

THE SECOND EDITION.

LONDON:

PRINTED FOR T. CADELL, IN THE STRAND.

M.DCC.XCI.
THE CONTENTS

OF THE

SECOND VOLUME.

PART of an Irregular Fragment — — Page 1
Sonnet to Mrs. Siddons — — — 21
Sonnet to Twilight — — — 25
Queen Mary's Complaint — — — 29
Penu, a Poem — — — 35
Duncan, an Ode — — — 163
ADVERTISEMENT.

The following Poem is formed on a very singular and sublime idea. A young gentleman, possessed of an uncommon genius for drawing, on visiting the Tower of London, passing one door of a singular construction, asked what apartment it led to, and expressed a desire to have it opened. The person who showed the place shook his head, and answered, "Heaven knows what is within that door—it has been shut for ages."—This answer made small impression on the other hearers, but a very deep one on the imagination of this youth.
Gracious Heaven! an apartment shut up for ages—and in the Tower!

"Ye Towers of Julius! London's lasting shame,
"By many a foul and midnight murder fed."

Genius builds on a slight foundation, and rears beautiful structures on "the baseless fabric of a vision." The above transient hint dwelt on the young man's fancy, and conjured into his memory all the murders which history records to have been committed in the Tower; Henry the Sixth, the Duke of Clarence, the two young princes, sons of Edward the Fourth, Sir Thomas Overbury, &c. He supposes all their ghosts assembled in this unexplored apartment, and to these his fertile imagination has added several others. One of the spectral raises an immense pall of black velvet, and discovers the remains of a murdered royal family, whose story is lost in the lapse of time.—The gloomy wildness of these images struck my imagination so forcibly, that endeavouring to catch the fire of the youth’s pencil, this Fragment was produced.
PART

OF AN

IRREGULAR FRAGMENT.
R I S E, winds of night! relentless tempests rise!
Rush from the troubled clouds, and o'er me roll;
In this chill pause a deeper horror lies,
A wilder fear appals my shudd'ring soul.—

'Twas
'Twas on this day*, this hour accurs'd,
That Nature starting from repose
Heard the dire shrieks of murder burst—
From infant innocence they rose,
And shook these solemn towers!
I shudd'ring pass that fatal room
For ages wrapt in central gloom;—
I shudd'ring pass that iron door
Which Fate perchance unlocks no more;
Death, smear'd with blood, o'er the dark portal lowers.

II.

How fearfully my step resounds
Along these lonely bounds:—

* The anniversary of the murder of Edward the Fifth, and his brother Richard, Duke of York.
Spare, savage blast! the taper's quivering fires,
Deep in these gathering shades its flame expires.
Ye hoist of heaven! the door recedes—
It mocks my grasp—what unseen hand,
Have burst its iron bands?
No mortal force this gate unbarr'd
Where danger lives, which terrors guard—
Dread powers! its screaming hinges close
On this dire scene of impious deeds—
My feet are fix'd!—Dismay has bound
My step on this polluted ground—
But lo! the pitying moon, a line of light
Aethwart the horrid darkness dimly throws,
And from yon grated window chafes night.—
PART OF AN

III.

Ye visions that before me roll,
That freeze my blood, that shake my soul!
Are ye the phantoms of a dream?
Pale spectres! are ye what ye seem?
They glide more near—
Their forms unfold!
Fix'd are their eyes, on me they bend—
Their glaring look is cold!

And hark!—I hear
Sounds that the throbbing pulse of life suspend.

IV.

"No wild illusion cheats thy light
"With shapes that only live in night—"
"Mark the native glories spread
"Around my bleeding brow!
"The crown of Albion wreath'd my head,
"And Gallia's lilies * twin'd below—
"When my father shook his spear,
"When his banner fought the skies,
"Her baffled host recoil'd with fear,
"Nor turn'd their shrinking eyes:—
"Soon as the daring eagle springs
"To bask in heav'n's empyreal light,
"The vultures ply their baleful wings,
"A cloud of deep'ning colour marks their "flight,
"Staining the golden day:—

* Henry the Sixth, crowned when an infant, at Paris.
"But see! amid the rav'rous brood

"A bird of fiercer aspect soar—

"The spirits of a rival race*,

"Hang on the noxious blast, and trace,

"With gloomy joy his destin'd prey;

"Inflame th' ambitious with that thirsts for

"blood,

"And plunge his talons deep in kindred gore.

V.

"View the stern form that hovers nigh,

"Fierce rolls his dauntless eye

"In scorn of hideous death;

* Richard the Third, by murdering so many near relations, seems to have revenge the sufferings of Henry the Sixth, and his family; the House of York.
"Till starting at a brother's * name,

"Horror shrinks his glowing frame,

"Locks the half-utter'd groan,

"And chills the parting breath:—

"Astonish'd Nature heav'd a moan!

"When her affrighted eye beheld the hands

"She form'd to cherish, rend her holy bands.

VI.

"Look where a royal infant † kneels,

"Shrieking, and agoniz'd with fear,

"He sees the dagger pointed near

"A much-lov'd brother's ‡ breast,

"And tells an absent mother all he feels:—

† Richard Duke of York. ‡ Edward the Fifth.

 His
"His eager eye he casts around;
"Where shall her guardian form be found,
"On which his eager eye would rest!
"On her he calls in accents wild,
"And wonders why her step is slow
"To save her suff'ring child!—
"Rob'd in the regal garb, his brother stands
"In more majestic woe—
"And meets the impious stroke with bosom bare,
"Then fearless grasps the murd'rer's hands,
"And asks the minister of hell to spare
"The child whose feeble arms sustain
"His bleeding form from cruel Death.—
"In vain fraternal fondness pleads
"For cold is now his livid cheek,
"And cold his last, expiring breath:
"And
"And now with aspect meek,

"The infant lifts his mournful eye,

"And asks with trembling voice, to die,

"If death will cure his heaving heart of pain—

"His heaving heart now bleeds—

"Foul tyrant! o'er the gilded hour

"That beams with all the blaze of power,

"Remorse shall spread her thickest shroud;

"The furies in thy tortur'd ear

"Shall howl, with curses deep, and loud,

"And wake distracting fear!

"I see the ghastly spectre rise,

"Whose blood is cold, whose hollow eyes

"Seem from his head to start—

"With upright hair, and shiv'ring heart,

B6

"Dark
"Dark o'er thy midnight couch he bends,
"And clasps thy shrinking frame, thy impious
"spirit rends."

VII.

Now his thrilling accents die—
His shape eludes my searching eye—
But who is he*, convuls'd with pain,
That writhes in every swelling vein?
Yet in so deep, so wild a groan,
A sharper anguish seems to live
Than life's expiring pang can give:—
He dies deserted, and alone—
If pity can allay thy woes
Sad spirit they shall find repose—

* Sir Thomas Overbury, poisoned in the Tower by Somerset.
Thy friend, thy long-lov'd friend is near!
He comes to pour the parting tear,
He comes to catch the parting breath—
Ah heaven! no melting look he wears,
His alter'd eye with vengeance glares;
Each frantic passion at his soul,
'Tis he has dash'd that venom'd bowl
With agony, and death.

VIII.

But whence arose that solemn call?
Yon bloody phantom waves his hand,
And beckons me to deeper gloom—
Rest, troubled form! I come—
Some unknown power my step impels
To horror's secret cells—

" For
"For thee I raise this sable pall,
"It shrouds a ghastly band:
"Stretch'd beneath, thy eye shall trace
"A mangled regal race:
"A thousand suns have roll'd, since light
"Rush'd on their solid night—
"See, o'er that tender frame grim famine hangs,
"And mocks a mother's pangs!
"The last, last drop which warm'd her veins
"That meagre infant drains—
"Then gnaws her fond, sustaining breast—
"Stretch'd on her feeble knees, behold
"Another victim sinks to lastling rest—
"Another, yet her matron arms would fold
"Who strives to reach her matron aims in "vain—
"Too
"Too weak her wasted form to raise,
"On him she bends her eager gaze;
"She sees the soft imploring eye
"That asks her dear embrace, the cure of pain—
"She sees her child at distance die—
"But now her stedfast heart can bear
"Unmov'd, the pressure of despair—
"When first the winds of winter urge their course
"O'er the pure stream, whose current smoothly
"glides,
"The heaving river swells its troubled tides;
"But when the bitter blast with keener force,
"O'er the high wave an icy fetter throws,
"The harden'd wave is fix'd in dead repose."—

"Say
"Say who that hoary form? alone he stands,
"And meekly lifts his wither’d hands—
"His white beard streams with blood—
"I see him with a smile, deride
"The wounds that pierce his shrivel’d side,
"Whence flows a purple flood—
"But sudden pangs his bosom tear—
"On one big drop, of deeper dye,
"I see him fix his haggard eye
"In dark, and wild despair!
"That sanguine drop which wakes his woe—
"Say, Spirit! whence its source:”—
"Ask no more its source to know—
"Ne’er shall mortal eye explore
"Whence flow’d that drop of human gore,
IRREGULAR FRAGMENT.

"Till the starting dead shall rise,
"Unchain'd from earth, and mount the skies,
"And time shall end his fated course."—

"Now th' unfathom'd depth behold—
"Look but once! a second glance
"Wraps a heart of human mold
"In death's eternal trance."

X.

"That shapeless phantom sinking slow
"Deep down the vast abyss below,
"Darts, thro' the mists that shroud his frame,
"A horror, nature hates to name!"—

"Mortal, could thine eyes behold
"All those fallen mists enfold,
"Thy
"Thy sinews at the sight accurst
"Would wither, and thy heart-strings burst;
"Death would grasp with icy hand
"And drag thee to our grisly hand—
"Away! the sable pall I spread,
"And give to rest th' unquiet dead—
"Haste! ere its horrid shroud enclose
"Thy form, benumb'd with wild affright,
"And plunge thee far thro' wastes of night,
"In yon black gulph's abhorr'd repose!"—
As starting at each step, I fly,
Why backward turns my frantic eye,
That closing portal past?—
Two sullen shades half-seen, advance!—
On me, a blasting look they cast,
And fix my view with dang'rous spells,
Where burning frenzy dwells!—
Again! their vengeful look—and now a speechless—

* * * * * * * *
SONNET,

TO MRS. SIDDONS.
SONNET,

To Mrs. Siddons.

SIDDONS! the Muse, for many a joy refin'd,
Feelings which ever seem too swiftly fled—
For those delicious tears she loves to shed,
Around thy brow the wreath of praise would bind—
But can her feeble notes thy praise unfold?

Repeat the tones each changing passion gives,
Or mark where nature in thy action lives,
Where, in thy pause, she speaks a pang untold!

When
When fierce ambition steels thy daring breast,
    When from thy frantic look our glance recedes;
Or oh, divine enthusiast! when opprest
    By anxious love, that eye of softness pleads—
The sun-beam all can feel, but who can trace
The instant light, and catch the radiant grace!
SONNET

To TWILIGHT.
SONNET

To TWILIGHT.

MEEK Twilight! soften the declining day,
And bring the hour my penlive spirit loves;
When, o'er the mountain flow descends the ray
That gives to silence the deserted groves,

As, let the happy court the morning still,
When, in her blooming loveliness array'd,

Fields fresh beauty light the vale, or hill,
And rapture warble in the vocal shade.

C. 2

Sweet
SONNET.

Sweet is the odour of the morning’s flower,
And rich in melody her accents rise;
Yet dearer to my soul the shadowy hour,
At which her blossoms close, her music dies—
For then, while languid nature droops her head,
She wakes the tear ’tis luxury to shed.
 QUEEN MARY's
COMPLAINT.
QUEEN MARY's

COMPLAINT.

I.

PALE moon! thy mild benignant light
May glad some other captive's sight;
Bright'ning the gloomy objects nigh,
Thy beams a lenient thought supply:
But, oh, pale moon! what ray of thine
Can soothe a misery like mine!
Chase the sad image of the past,
And woes for ever doom'd to last.

C 4

Where
II.

Where are the years with pleasure gay?

How bright their course! how short their stay!—

Where are the crowns, that round my head

A double glory vainly spread?

Where are the beauties wont to move,

The grace, converting awe to love?

Alas, had fate design'd to bless,

Its equal hand had giv'n me less!

III.

Why did the regal garb array

A breast that tender passions sway?

A soul of unsuspicious frame,

Which leans with faith on friendship's name—

Ye vanish'd hopes! ye broken ties!

By perfidy, in friendship's guise,
This breast was injur’d, lost, betray’d—
Where, where shall Mary look for aid?

IV.

How could I hope redrefs to find,
Stern rival! from thy envious mind?
How could I e’er thy words believe?
O ever practis’d to deceive!
Thy wiles abhor’re shall please alone
Cold bosoms, selfish as thy own;
While ages hence, indignant hear
The horrors of my fate severe.

V.

Have not thy unrelenting hands
Torn nature’s most endearing bands?
Whate’er I hop’d from woman’s name,
The ties of blood, the stranger’s claim;

\[ C_5 \]

A sister-
A sister-queen's despairing breast
On thee securely lean'd for rest;
On thee! from whom that breast has bled
With sharper ills than those I fled.

VI.

Oh, skil'd in every baser art!
Tyrant! to this unguarded heart
No guilt so black as thine belongs,
Which loads my length'n'ing years with wrongs.
Strike then at once, infatiate foe!
The long, premeditated blow;
So shall thy jealous terrors cease,
And Mary's harrass'd soul have peace.
PERU.

A

POEM,

IN SIX CANTOS.
ADVERTISEMET.

THAT no readers of the following work may entertain expectations respecting it which it would ill satisfy, it is necessary to acquaint them, that the author has not had the presumption even to attempt a full, historical narration of the fall of the Peruvian empire. To describe that important event with accuracy, and to display with clearness and force the various causes which combined to produce it, would require all the energy of genius, and the most glowing colours of imagination. Conscious of her utter inability to execute such a design, she has has only aimed at a simple detail of some few incidents that make a part of that romantic story; where the unparalleled sufferings of an innocent and amiable people, form the most affecting subjects of true pathos, while their climate, totally unlike our own, furnishes new and ample materials for poetic description.
THE ARGUMENT.

General description of the country of Peru, and of its animal, and vegetable productions—the virtues of the people—character of Ataliba, their Monarch—his love for Alzira—their nuptials celebrated—character of Zorai, her father—descent of the genius of Peru—prediction of the fate of that empire.
WHERE the pacific deep in silence laves

The western shore, with slow and languid waves,

There, lost Peruvia, rose thy cultured scene,

The wave an emblem of thy joy serene:

There nature ever in luxuriant showers

Pours from her treasures, the perennial flowers;

In
In its dark foliage plum’d, the tow’ring pine
Ascends the mountain, at her call divine;
The palm’s wide leaf its brighter verdure spreads,
And the proud cedars bow their lofty heads;

The citron, and the glowing orange spring,
And on the gale a thousand odours fling;
The guava, and the soft ananas bloom,
The balsam ever drops a rich perfume:

The bark, reviving shrub! Oh not in vain
Thy rosy blossoms tinge Peruvia’s plain;
Ye tow’ring gales, around those blossoms blow,
Ye balmy dew-drops, o’er the tendrils flow.

Lo, as the health-diffusing plant aspires,
Disease, and pain, and tow’ring death retires;
Affection sees new luster light the eye,
And feels her vanish’d joys again are nigh.
The Pacos*, and Vicunnas † sport around,
And the meek Lamas ‡, burden'd, press the ground.
Amid the vocal groves, the feather'd throng
Pour to the lightning breeze their native song;
The mocking-bird her varying note essays,
The vain macaw his glitt'ring plume displays.
While spring's warm ray the mild suffusion sheds,
The plaintive humming-bird his pinion spreads;
His wings their colours to the sun unfold,
The vivid scarlet, and the blazing gold;
He sees the flower which morning tears bedew,
Sucks on its breast, and drinks th' ambrosial dew:

* The pacos is a domestic animal of Peru. Its wool resembles the colour of dried roses.
† The vicunnas are a species of wild pacos.
‡ The lamas are employed as mules, in carrying burdens.
Then seeks with fond delight the social nest
Parental care has rear’d, and love has blest:
The drops that on the blossom’s light leaf hung,
He bears exulting to his tender young;
The grateful joy his happy accents prove,
Is nature, smiling on her works of love.

Nor less, Peruvia, for thy favour’d clime
The virtues rose, unfullied, and sublime:
There melting charity, with ardor warm,
Spread her wide mantle o’er th’ unshelter’d form;
Cheer’d with the festal song, her lib’ral toils
While in the lap of age she pour’d the spoils.

* The people cheerfully assisted in reaping those fields, whose duce was given to old persons, past their labour. simplicity in every vale was found,
The meek nymph smil'd, with reeds, and rushes
crown'd;
And innocence in light, transparent vest,
Mild vibrant! the gentle region bieft:
As from her lip enchanting accents part,
They thrill with pleasure the responsive heart;
And o'er the ever-blooming vales around,
Soft echoes waft each undulating sound.

This happy region Ataliba sway'd,
Whose mild behoef the willing heart obey'd;
Descendant of a scepter'd, sacred race,
Whose origin from glowing suns they trace;
And as o'er nature's form, the solar light
Diffuses beauty, and inspires delight;

So,
So, o'er Peruvia flow'd the liberal ray
Of mercy, lovelier than the smile of day!
In Ataliba's pure and generous heart
The virtues bloom'd without the aid of art.
His gentle spirit, love's soft power posset,
And stamp'd Alzira's image on his breast;
Alzira, form'd each tenderness to prove,
That soothes in friendship, and that charms in love.
But, ah! in vain the drooping muse would paint
(He accents languid, and her colours faint.)
How dear the joys love's early wishes sought,
How mild his spirit, and how pure his thought,
Ere wealth in fullen pomp was seen to rise,
And break the artless bosom's holy ties;
Blast with his touch affection's opening flower,
And chill the hand that rear'd her blissful bower.
CANTO I.

Fortune, light nymph! still bless the sordid heart,
Still to thy venal slave thy gifts impart;
Bright in his view may all thy meteors shine,
And lo! Peruvia open every mine;
For him the robe of eastern pomp display,
The gems that ripen in the torrid ray;
Collected may their guilty lustre stream
Fall on the eye that courts the partial beam:
But Love, oh Love! should haply this late hour,
One foster mind avow thy genuine power;
Breathe at thy altar nature's simple strain,
And strew the heart's pure incense on thy fane;
Give to that bosom scorning fortune's toys,
Thy sweet enchantments, and thy virtuous joys;
Ed pleasure bloom thro' many a circling year,
Which love shall wing, and constancy endear;

Far
Far from this happy clime avert the woes,
The heart from alienated fondness knows;
And from that agony the spirit sate,
When unrelenting yawns the op'ning grave;
When death dissolves the ties for ever dear;
When frantic passion pours her parting tear;
With all the cherish'd pains affection feels,
Hangs on the quiv'ring lip, that silence seals;
Views fondness struggling in the closing eye,
And marks it mingling in the falt'ring sigh;
As the lov'd form, while folded to her breast,
On earth's cold bosom seeks more lasting rest!
Leave her fond soul in hopeless griefs to mourn,
Clasp the pale corse, and bathe th' unconscious urn;
Mild, to the wounds that pierce her bleeding heart,
Nature's expiring pang, and death's keen dart.
CANTO I.

Pure was the luster of the orient ray,
That joyful wak’d Alzira’s nuptial day:
Her auburn hair, spread loosely to the wind,
The virgin train, with rosy chaplets bind;
The scented flowers that form her bridal wreathe,
A deeper hue, a richer fragrance breathe.
The gentle tribe now fought the hallow’d fane,
Where warbling vestals pour’d the choral strain:
There aged Zorai, his Alzira preest
With love parental, to his anxious breast:
Priest of the sun, within the sacred shrine
His fervent spirit breath’d the strain divine;
With glowing hand, the guiltless off’ring spread,
With pious zeal the pure libation shed;
Nor vain the incense of erroneous praise
When meek devotion’s soul the tribute pays;

Vol. II.
On wings of purity behold it rise,
While bending mercy wafts it to the skies!

Peruvia! oh delightful land, in vain
The virtues flourish'd on thy beauteous plain;
In vain sweet pleasure there was seen to move,
And wore the smile of peace, the bloom of love;
For soon shall burst the unrelenting storm,
Rend her soft robe, and crush her tender form:
Peruvia! soon the fatal hour shall rise,
The hour despair shall waste in tears and sighs;
Fame shall record the horrors of thy fate,
And distant ages weep for ills so great.

Now o'er the deep chill night her mantle hung,
Dim on the wave the moon's faint crescent hung;
Peruvia's Genius sought the liquid plain,
Sooth'd by the languid murmurs of the main; 140
When sudden clamour the illusion broke,
Wild on the surface of the deep it spoke;
A riling breeze expands her flowing veil,
Aghast with fear, she spied a flying sail—
The lofty mast impeds, the banner waves,
The ruffled surge th' incumbent vessel laves;
With eager eye she views her destin'd foe
Lead to her peaceful shores th' advent'rous prow;
Trembling she knelt, with wild disord'r'd air,
And pour'd with frantic energy her pray'r— 150
"Oh, ye avenging spirits of the deep!
"Mount the blue lightning's wing, o'er ocean sweep;
"Loud from your central caves the shell resound,
' That summons death to your abyss profound;

D 2 " Call
"Call the pale spectre from his dark abode,
"To print the billow, swell the black'ning flood,
"Rush o'er the waves, the rough'ning deep deform,
"Howl in the blast, and animate the storm—
"Relentless powers! for not one quiv'ring breeze
"Has ruffled yet the surface of the seas—
"Swift from your rocky steepes, ye condors * stray,
"Wave your black plumes, and cleave th' aërial way;
"Proud in terrific force, your wings expand,
"Press the firm earth, and darken all the strand;
"Bid the stern foe retire with wild affright,
"And shun the region veil'd in partial night.
"Vain hope, devoted land! I read thy doom,
"My sad prophetic soul can pierce the gloom;

* The condor is an inhabitant of the Andes. Its wings, when expanded, are said to be eighteen feet wide.

"I see.
I see, I see my lov'd, my favour'd clime,
Composer'd, and fading in its early prime.

But not in vain the beauteous realm shall bleed,
Too late shall Europe's race deplore the deed.

Region abhor'd! be gold the tempting bane,

The curse that defolates thy hostile plain;

May pleasure tinge with venom'd drops the bowl,

And luxury unnerve the sick'ning soul.
—

Ah, not in vain she pour'd th' impassion'd tear!
Ah, not in vain she call'd the powers to hear!

When borne from loft Peruvia's bleeding land,
The guilty treasures beam'd on Europe's strand;

Each sweet affection fled the tainted shore,
And virtue wander'd, to return no more.
PERU.

CANTO THE SECOND.

D 4
The Argument.

Pizarro, a Spanish Captain, lands with his forces—his meeting with Ataliba—its unhappy consequences—Zorai dies—Ataliba imprisoned, and strangled—Alzira's despair, and madness.
FLUSH'D with impatient hope, the martial band
   By stern Pizarro led, approach the land:
No terrors arm the hostile brow, for guile
   Harms to betray, in Candour's open smile.
No artless for distrust, the monarch springs
   To meet his latent foe on friendship's wings:
As he moves, with glitt'ring splendours crown'd,
   He feather'd chiefs the golden throne surround;

D 6         The
The waving canopy its plume displays,
Whole varied hues reflect the morning rays;
With native grace he hails the warrior train,
Who stood majestic on Peruvia's plain,
In all the savage pomp of armour drest,
The radiant helmet, and the nodding crest.
Yet themes of joy Pizarro's lips impart,
And charm with eloquence the simple heart;
Unfolding to the monarch's wond'ring thought,
All that inventive arts the rude have taught:
And now he bids the purer spirit rise
Above the circle of surrounding skies;
Presents the page that shed religion's light
O'er the dark mist of intellectual night;
While thrill'd with awe the monarch trembling stand'd,
He dropp'd the hallow'd volume from his hands.

Sudden
* Sudden, while frantic zeal each breast inspires, 25
And shudd'ring demons fan the impious fires,
The bloody signal waves, the banners play,
The naked sabres flash their streaming ray;

"Sudden, while frantic zeal, &c." Pizarro, who during a long conference, had with difficulty restrained his soldiers, eager to seize the rich spoils of which they had now so near a view, immediately gave the signal of assault. At once the martial music struck up, the cannon and muskets began to fire, the horse fellied out fiercely to the charge, the infantry rushed on sword in hand. The Peruvians, astonished at the suddenness of an attack which they did not expect, and dismayed with the destructive effects of the fire-arms, fled with universal consternation on every side. Pizarro, at the head of his chosen band, advanced directly towards the Inca; and with his Nobles crowded around him with officious zeal, and felled the promisers at his feet, while they vied one with another in sacrificing their own lives, that they might cover the sacred person of the Sovereign, the Spaniards soon penetrated to the royal seat; and Pizarro seizing the Inca by the arm, dragged him to the ground, and carried him a prisoner to his quarters.—Robinson's

The
The martial trumpet's animating sound,
And thund'ring cannon, rend the vault around;
While fierce in sanguine rage the sons of Spain
Rush on Peru's unarm'd, devoted train;
The fiends of slaughter urg'd their dire career,
And virtue's guardian spirits dropp'd a tear.—
Mild Zorai fell, deploring human strife,
And clos'd with prayer his consecrated life.
In vain Peruvia's chiefs undaunted stood,
Shield their lov'd prince, and bathe his robes in blood.
Touch'd with heroic ardor, rush around,
And high of soul, receive each fatal wound:
Dragg'd from his throne, and hurry'd o'er the plain.
The wretched monarch swells the captive train;
With iron grasp, the frantic prince they bear,
And bles's the omen of his wild despair.
CAN TO II.

Deep in the gloomy dungeon's lone domain,
Loaf Ataliba wore the galling chain;
The earth's cold bed refus'd oblivious rest,
While throb'd the pains of thousands at his breast;
Alzira's desolating moan he hears,
And with the monarch's, blends the lover's tears—
Soon had Alzira felt affliction's dart
Pierce her soft soul, and rend her bleeding heart;
Its quick pulsations paus'd, and, chill'd with dread,
A livid hue her fading check o'erspread;
No tear she gave to love, she breath'd no sigh,
Her lips were mute, and clos'd her languid eye;
Fainter, and slower heav'd her thiv'ring breast,
And her calm'd passions seem'd in death to rest!—
At length reviv'd, mid rising heaps of slain
She prest with trembling step, the crimson plain;
The dungeon's gloomy depth she fearlessly fought,
For love, with scorn of danger arm'd her thought:
The cell that holds her captive lord she gains,
Her tears fall quivering on a lover's chains!
Too tender spirit, check the filial tear.

A sympathy more soft, a tie more dear
Shall claim the drops that frantic passion sheds,
When the rude storm its darkest pinion spreads.

Lo! bursting the deep cell where mis'ry lay,
The human vultures seize the dove-like prey!

In vain her treasur'd wealth Peruvia gave,
This dearer treasure from their grasp to fave:

Alzira! lo, the ruthless murd'rs come,
This moment seals thy Ataliba's doom.

Ah, what avails the shriek that anguish pours!
The look, that mercy's lenient aid implores!
Torn from thy clinging arms, thy throbbing breast,
The fatal cord his agony supprest:
In vain the livid corse she fondly clasps,
And pours her sorrows o'er the form she grasps—

The murderers now their struggling victim tear
From the lost object of her keen despair:
The swelling pang unable to sustain,
Dilatation throb'd in every beating vein:
Its sudden tumults seize her yielding soul,
And in her eye distemper'd glances roll—

"They come! (the mourner cried, with panting breath,)

"To give the loft Alzira rest in death!

"One moment more, ye bloody forms, bestow,

"One moment more for ever cures my woe—

"Lo
"Lo where the purple evening sheds her light
"On blest remains! oh hide them, pitying night!
"Slow in the breeze I see the verdure wave
"That shrouds with tufted grass, my lover's grave:
"There, on its wand'ring wing in mildness blows
"The mournful gale, nor wakes his deep repose—
"And see, yon hoary form still lingers there!
"Dishevell’d by rude winds his silver hair;
"O'er his chill’d bosom falls the winter's rain,
"I feel the big drops on my wither'd brain:
"Not for himself that tear his bosom steeps,
"For his lost child it flows, for me he weeps!
"No more the dagger’s point shall pierce thy breast,
"For calm and lovely is thy silent rest;
"Yet still in dust these eyes shall see thee roll,
"Still the sad thought shall waste Alzira's soul—
"What bleeding phantom moves along the storm?
"It is—it is my lover's well-known form!
"Tho' the dim moon is veil'd, his robes of light
"Tinge the dark clouds, and gild the mist of night:

"Approach! Alzira's breast no terrors move,
"Her fears are all for ever lost in love!
"Safe on the hanging cliff I now can rest,
"And press its pointed pillow to my breast—
"He weeps! in heav'n he weeps! I feel his tear—
"It claims my trembling heart, yet still 'tis dear—
"To him all joyless are the realms above,
"That pale look speaks of pity, and of love!
"My love ascends! he soars in azure light;
"Say tender spirit—cruel! stay thy flight—

"Again
"Again descend in yonder rolling cloud,
"And veil Alzira in thy misty shroud—
"He comes! my love has plac'd the dagger near,
"And on its hallow'd point has dropp'd a tear'—
As roll'd her wand'ring glances wide around
She snatch'd a reeking sabre from the ground;
Firmly her lifted hand the weapon press'd,
And deep she pung'd it in her panting breast:
"'Tis but a few short moments that divide
"Alzira from her love!"—she said—and died.
PERU.

CANTO THE THIRD.
The Argument.

Pizarro takes possession of Cuzco—the fanaticism of Valverde, a Spanish priest—its dreadful effects—A Peruvian priest put to the torture—his daughter’s distress—he is rescued by Las Casas, an amiable Spanish Calvinist, and led to a place of safety, where he dies—his daughter’s narration of her sufferings—her death.
PERU.

CANTO THE THIRD.

NOW stern Pizarro seeks the distant plains,
Where beauteous Cuzco lifts her golden spires:
The meek Peruvians gaz'd in pale dismay,
For bar'd the dark oppressor's sanguine way:
And soon on Cuzco, where the dawning light
Of glory shone, foretelling day more bright,
Here the young arts had shed unfolding flowers,
Still as spreading desolation lowers;
Vol. II.

While
While buried deep in everlasting shade,
Those lustres sicken, and those blossoms fade.
And yet, devoted land, not gold alone,
Or wild ambition wak'd thy parting groan;
For, lo! a fiercer fiend, with joy elate,
Feasts on thy suff'ring, and impels thy fate.
Fanatic fury rears her fullen shrine,
Where vultures prey, where venom'd adders twine;
Her savage arm with purple torrents stains
Thy rocking temples, and thy falling fanes;
Her blazing torches flash the mounting fire,
She grasps the sabre, and she lights the pyre;
Her voice is thunder, rending the still air,
Her glance the livid lightning's fatal glare;
Her lips unhallow'd breathe their impious strain.
And pure religion's sacred voice profane;
CANTO III.

Whole precepts, pity’s mildest deeds approve,
Whole law is mercy, and whose soul is love.
Fanatic fury wakes the rising storm—
She wears the sturn Valverda’s hideous form:
His bosom never felt another’s woes,
No shriek of anguish breaks its dark repose.

The temple nods—an aged form appears—
He beats his breast—he rends his silver hairs—
Valverda drags him from the blest abode
Where his meek spirit humbly sought its God:
To his aid his child, soft Zilia, springs,
And strews the robe to which she clings,
Straining from Peravia’s frightened throng,
Toward like youths impetuous rush’d along;
He grasps his twanging bow with furious air,
But in his troubled eye sat fierce despair.
But all in vain his erring weapon flies,
Pierc'd by a thousand wounds, on earth he lies.
His drooping head the heart-struck Zilia rais'd,
And on the youth in speechless anguish gaz'd;
While he, who fondly shar'd his danger, flew,
And from his breast a reeking sabre drew.
"Deep in my faithful bosom let me hide
"The fatal steel, that would our souls divide,"
He quick exclaims—the dying warrior cries,
"Ah, yet forbear!—by all the sacred ties,
"That bind our hearts, forbear"—In vain he spoke,
Friendship with frantic zeal impels the stroke:
"Thyself for ever lost, thou hop'st in vain,
"The youth replied, my spirit to detain;
"From thee, my soul, in childhood's earliest year,
"Caught the light pleasure, and the starting tear;
C A N T O I I I.

"Thy friendship then my young affections blest,
The first pure passion of my infant breast;
That passion, which o'er life delight has shed,
By reason cherish'd, and by virtue fed:
And still in death I feel its strong control;
Its sacred impulse wings my fleeting soul,
That only lingers here till thou depart,
Whose image lives upon my fainting heart."

In vain the gen'rous youth, with panting breath,
Pour'd these soft murmurs in the ear of death;
It reads the fatal truth in Zilia's eye,
And gives to friendship his expiring sigh.—

But now with rage Valverda's glances roll,
And mark the vengeance rankling in his soul;
He bends his wrinkled brow—his lips impart
The brooding purpose of his venom'd heart;
He bids the hoary priest in mutter'd strains,
Abjure his faith, forfake his falling fanes,
While yet the ling'ring pangs of torture wait,
While yet Valverda's power suspends his fate.
" Vain man, the victim cried, to hoary years
" Know death is mild, and virtue feels no fears:
" Cruel of spirit, come! let tortures prove
" The Power I serv'd in life, in death I
" love."—
He ceas'd—with rugged cords his limbs they bound,
And drag the aged sufferer on the ground;
They grasp his feeble form, his tresses tear,
His robe they rend, his shrivell'd bosom bare.
Ah, see his uncomplaining soul sustain
The fling of insult, and the dart of pain;
Canto III.

His steadfast spirit feels one pang alone;
A child’s despair awakes one suff’ring groan—
The mourner kneels to catch his parting breath,
To soothe the agony of lingering death;
No sound the breath’d, no tear had power to flow,
Still on her lip expir’d th’ unutter’d woe:
Yet ah, her livid cheek, her steadfast look,
The desolated soul’s deep anguish spoke—
Mild victim! close not yet thy languid eyes;
Pure spirit! claim not yet thy kindred skies;
A pitying angel comes to stay thy flight,
La Casas* bids thee view returning light:
Ah, let that sacred drop to virtue dear,
Face thy wrongs—receive his precious tear;

* "La Casas, &c." that amiable Ecclesiastic, who obtained by his humanity the title of Protector of the Indies.
See his flush'd cheek with indignation glow,
While from his lips the tones of pity flow.
"Oh suffering Lord! he cried, whose streaming
  "blood
"Was pour'd for man—Earth drank the sacred
  "flood—
"Whose mercy in the mortal pang forgave
"The murd'rous band, thy love alone could save;
"Forgive—thy goodness bursts each narrow bound,
"Which feeble thought, and human hope surround;
"Forgive the guilty wretch, whose impious hand
"From thy pure altar flings the flaming brand,
"In human blood that hallow'd altar steeps,
"Libation dire! while groaning nature weeps—
"The limits of thy mercy dares to scan,
"The object of thy love, his victim,—Man;
C A N T O III.

"While yet I linger, lo, the suff’rer dies—
"I see his frame convuls’d—I hear his sighs—
"Whoe’er controuls the purpose of my heart
"First in this breast shall plunge his guilty dart;"

With anxious step he flew, with eager hands
He broke the fetters, burst the cruel bands.

As the fall’n angel heard with awful fear
The cherub’s grave rebuke, in grace severe,
And fled, while horror plum’d his impious crest *,

The form of virtue, as she stood confess;

So fierce Valverda sullen mov’d along,
Abash’d, and follow’d by the guilty throng.

At length the hoary victim, freed from chains,
Las Cafas gently leads to safer plains;

* On his crest

Set horror plum’d.

Par. E ps, iv. 988.

E 5 Soft
See his flush'd cheek with indignation glow,
While from his lips the tones of pity flow.
"Oh suffering Lord! he cried, whose streaming
"blood
"Was pour'd for man—Earth drank the sacred
"flood—
"Whose mercy in the mortal pang forgave
"The murd'rous band, thy love alone could save;
"Forgive—thy goodness bursts each narrow bound,
"Which feeble thought, and human hope surround;
"Forgive the guilty wretch, whose impious hand
"From thy pure altar flings the flaming brand,
"In human blood that hallow'd altar steeps,
"Libation dire! while groaning nature weeps—
"The limits of thy mercy dares to scan,
"The object of thy love, his victim,—Man;
"Whi
"While yet I linger, lo, the sufferer dies—
"I see his frame convuls'd—I hear his sighs—
"Who'er controuls the purpose of my heart
"First in this breast shall plunge his guilty dart;"
With anxious step he flew, with eager hands
He broke the fetters, burst the cruel bands.
As the fall'n angel heard with awful fear
The cherub's grave rebuke, in grace severe,
And fled, while horror plum'd his impious crest *,
The form of virtue, as she stood confest;
So fierce Valverda fullen mov'd along,
Abash'd, and follow'd by the guilty throng.
At length the hoary victim, freed from chains,
Las Casas gently leads to safer plains;

* On his crest
Sat horror plum'd.

Par. Lysi, iv. 988.
Soft Zilia's yielding soul the joy oppressed,
She bath'd with floods of tears her father's breast. 130
Las Casas now explores a secret cave
Whose shaggy sides the languid billows lave;
"There rest secure, he cried, the Christian God
"Will hover near, will guard the lone abode."
Oft to the gloomy cell his steps repair,
While night's chill breezes wave his silver'd hair;
Oft in the tones of love, the words of peace,
He bids the bitter tears of anguish cease;
Bids drooping hope uplift her languid eyes,
And points a dearer bliss beyond the skies.
Yet ah, in vain his pious cares would save
The hoary sufferer from the op'ning grave;
For deep the pangs of torture pierc'd his frame,
And sunk his wasted life's expiring flame;
To his cold lip Las Cafà's hand he prest,
He faintly clasp'd his Zilia to his breast;
Then cried, "the God, whom now my vows adore,
"My heart thro' life obey'd, unknowing more;
"His mild forgiveness then my soul shall prove,
"His mercy share—Las Cafà's God, is Love!"
He spoke no more—his Zilia's frantic moan
Was heard responsive to his dying groan.
"Victim of impious zeal, Las Cafàs cries,
"Accept departed shade, a Christian's sighs;
"And thou, soft mourner, tender, drooping
"form,
"What power shall guard thee from the fearful
"storm?"
"Weep not for me, she cried, for Zilia's breast
"Soon in the sheltering earth shall find its rest.

E 6  "Hope
"Hope not the victim of despair to save,
"I ask but death—I only seek a grave—
"Witness thou mangled form that earth retains,
"Witness a murder’d lover’s cold remains.
"I liv’d my father’s pangs to soothe, to share;
"I bore to live, tho’ life was all despair—
"In vain my lover, urg’d by fond desire
"To shield from torture, and from death my fire,
"Flew to the fane where stern Valverda rag’d,
"And fearless, with unequal force engag’d;
"I saw him bleeding, dying press the ground,
"I drew the poison from each fatal wound;
"I bath’d those wounds with tears—he pour’d a sigh—
"A drop hung trembling in his closing eye—
"Ah, still his mournful sign I shiv’ring hear,
"In every pulse I feel his parting tear—"
C A N T O. III.

"I faint—an icy coldness chills each vein,

"No more these feeble limbs their load sustain:

"Spirit of pity! catch my fleeting breath,

"A moment stay—and close my eyes in death—

"Las Casas, thee, thy God in mercy gave

"To soothe my pangs—to find the wretch a

"grave."—

She ceas'd—her spirit fled to purer spheres—

Las Casas bathes the pallid coarfe with tears—

Fly, minister of good! nor ling'ring shed

Thole fruitless sorrows o'er the unconscious dead;

Ah fly—'tis innocence, 'tis virtue bleeds,

And heav'n will listen, when an angel pleads;

I view the sanguine flood, the wasting flame,

I hear a suff'rering world Las Casas claim!

P E R U.
PERU.

CANTO THE FOURTH.
THE ARGUMENT.

Almagro's expedition to Chili—his troops suffer great hardships from cold, in crossing the Andes—they reach Chili—the Chilese make a brave resistance—the revolt of the Peruvians in Cuzco—they are led on by Manco-Capac, the successor of Ataliba—his parting with Cora, his wife—the Peruvians regain half their city—Almagro leaves Chili—to avoid the Andes, he crosses a vast desert—his troops can find no water—the rift divide in two bands—Alphonso leads the second band, which soon reaches a fertile valley—the Spaniards observe the natives are employed in searching the streams for gold—they resolve to attack them.
NOW the stern partner of Pizarro's toils,
Almagro, lure'd by hope of golden spoils,
To distant Chili's ever-verdant meads,
Thro' paths untrod, a band of warriors leads;
O'er the high Andes' frozen steep they go,
And wander mid' eternal hills of snow:
In vain the vivifying orb of day
Darts on th' impervious ice his fervent ray;
Cold,
Cold, keen as chains the oceans of the Pole,
Numbs the shrunk frame, and chills the vigorous soul—

At length they reach luxuriant Chili's plain,
Where ends the dreary bound of winter's reign;
Where spring sheds odours thro' th' unvaried year,
And bathes the flower of summer, with her tear.

When first the brave Chiléfe, with eager glance,
Behold the hostile sons of Spain advance;
I heard the loud thunder of the cannon crash,
And view'd the light'ning of the instant flash,
The threat'ning sabre red with purple streams,
The lance that quiver'd in the solar beams;
With pale surprise they saw the low'ring storm,
Where hung dark danger, in an unknown form:
But soon their spirits, stung with gen'rous flame,
Renounce each terror, and for vengeance flame;
Pant high with sacred freedom's ardent glow,
And met intrepid the superior foe.
Long unsubdu'd by stern Almagro's train,
Their valiant tribes unequal fight maintain;
Long victory hover'd doubtful o'er the field,
And oft the forc'd Iberia's band to yield;
Oft tore from Spain's proud head her laurel bough,
And bade it blossom on Peruvia's brow;
When sudden tidings reach'd Almagro's ear
That shook the warrior's soul with doubt and fear.

Of murder'd Ataliba's royal race
There yet remain'd a youth of blooming grace,
Who
Who pin'd, the captive of relentless Spain,
And long in Cuzco dragg'd her galling chain;
Capac his name, whose soul indignant bears
The rankling fetters, and revenge prepares.

But since his daring spirit must forego
The hope to rush upon the tyrant foe,
Led by his parent orb, that gives the day,
And fierce as darts the keen, meridian ray.

He vows to bend unseen his hostile course,
Then on the victors rise with latent force,
As sudden from its cloud the brooding storm,
Bursts in the thunder's voice, the lightning's form—
For this, from slern Pizarro he obtains
The boon, enlarg'd, to seek the neighboring plains,
For one bless'd day, and with his friends unite
To crown with solemn pomp an ancient rite;
Sure the dear pleasures of the social hour,
And mid' their fetters twine' one festal flower.
So spoke the Prince—far other thoughts posset,
Far other purpose animates his breast:
For now Peruvia's nobles he commands
To lead, with silent step, her martial bands.
Forth to the destin'd spot, prepar'd to dare
The fiercest shock of dire, unequal war;
While every tender, human interest pleads,
And urges the firm soul to lofty deeds.
Now Capac hail'd th' eventful morning's light,
Rise with its dawn, and panted for the fight;
Be fill'd with fondness to his heart he prey'd
The tender Cora, partner of his breast;
Who with her lord, had fought the dungeon's gloom.
And wailed there in grief, her early bloom.

"No
"No more, he cried, no more my love shall feel
The mingled agonies I fly to heal;
I go, but soon exulting shall return,
And bid my faithful Cora cease to mourn:
For oh, amid' each pang my bosom knows,
What wastes, what wounds it most, are Cora's woes.
Sweet was the love that crown'd our happier hours,
And shed new fragrance o'er a path of flowers;
But sure divided sorrow more endears
The tie, that passion seals with mutual tears"—
He paus'd—fast-flowing drops bedew'd her eyes,
While thus in mournful accents she replies:
Still let me feel the pressure of thy chain,
Still share the fetters which my love detain;
That
"Those piercing irons to my soul are dear,
"Nor will their sharpness wound while thou art near.
"Oh think not, when in thee alone I live,
"This breast can bear the pain thy dangers give,
"Look on our helpless babe in misery nurt—
"My child—my child, thy mother's heart will burst!
"I think I see the raging battle rise,
"And hear this harmless sufferer's feeble cries;
"I view the blades that pour a sanguine flood,
"And plunge their cruel edge in infant blood."—
She could no more; her father's accents die,
Yet her soul spoke expressive in her eye;
Her lord beholds her grief, with tender pain,
And leads her breathless, to a sheltering bane.
Now high in air his feather'd standard waves,
A numerous
A num'rous host along the plain appear,
And hail their monarch with a gen'rous tear:
To Cuzco's gate now rush th' increasing throngs,
And such their ardor, rouz'd by sense of wrongs,
That vainly would Pizarro's vet'ran force
Arrest the torrent in its raging course;
In vain his murd'ring bands terrific flood,
And plung'd their sabres in a sea of blood:
Danger and death Peruvia's sons disdain,
And half their captive city soon regain.
With such pure joy the natives view their lord
To the warm wishes of their souls restor'd
As feels the tender child whom force had torn
From his lov'd home, and bruis'd the flower of morn,
Canto IV.

When his fond searching eye again beholds
His mother's form, when in her arms she folds
The long lost child, who bathes with tears her face,
And finds his safety in her dear embrace.—

Soon as Almagro heard applauding fame
The triumphs of Peru, loud proclaim,
Unconquer'd Chili's vale he swift forsakes,
And his bold course to distant Cuzco takes;

Sams Andes' icy shower, its chilling snows,
The arrowy gale that on its summits blows;
The burning desert undismay'd he pass,
And meets the ardours of the fiery blast.

Now as along the sultry waste they move,
The keenest pang of raging thirst they prove:
No cooling fruit its grateful juice distils,
Nor flows one balmy drop from crystal rills;
For nature sickens in th' oppressive beam,
That shrinks the vernal bud, and dries the stream;
While horror, as his giant stature grows,
O'er the drear void his spreading shadow throws.

Almagro's band now pale, and fainting stray,
While death oft barr'd the sinking warrior's way:
At length the chief divides his martial force,
And bids Alphonso, by a sep'rate course,
Lead o'er the hideous defart half his train—
"And search, he cried, this drear, uncultur'd
plain:
"Perchance some fruitage withering in the breeze,
"The pains of lessen'd numbers may appease;
"Or
"Or Heav'n in pity, from some genial shower,
"On the parch'd lip one precious drop may
"pour."

Not far the troops of young Alphonso went,
When sudden, from a rising hill's ascent,
They view a valley, fed by fertile springs,
Which Andes from his lofty summit flings;
Where summer's flowers their mingled odours shed,
And wildly bloom, a waste by beauty spread—
To the charm'd warrior's eye, the vernal scene
That 'mid the howling defart, trim'd serene,
Appear'd like nature rising from the breast
Of chaos, in her infant graces dreft:

F 3
When
When warbling angels hail'd the lovely birth,
And sloop'd from heav'n to bless the new-born earth

And now Alphonso, and his martial band,
On the rich border of the valley stand;
They quaff the limpid stream with eager haste,
And the pure juice that swells the fruitage taste;
Then give to balmy rest the night's still hours,
Fann'd by the sighing gale that shuts the flowers.

163
Soon as the purple beam of morning glows,
Refresh'd from all their toils, the warriors rose;
And saw the gentle natives of the mead
Search the clear currents for the golden seed;
Which from the mountain's height with headlong sweep

165
The torrents bear, in many a shining heap—
Isis's sons beheld with anxious brow
The tempting lure, then breathe th' unpitying vow
O'er those fair lawns to pour a sanguine flood,
And dye those lucid streams with waves of blood. 170
Thus, while the humming bird in beauty drest,
Enchanting offspring of the ardent West,
Attunes his soothing song to notes of love,
Mild as the murmurs of the mourning dove;
While his soft plumage glows with brighter hues, 175
And while with tender bill he sips the dews,
The savage Condor, on terrific wings,
From Andes' frozen steep, relentless springs;
And quivering in his fangs, his hapless prey
Drops his gay plume, and sighs his soul away. 180
PERU.

CANTO THE FIFTH.

F 5
Character of Zamor, a Bard—his passion for Aciloe, daughter of the Cazique who rules the valley—the Peruvian tribe prepare to defend themselves—a battle—the Peruvians are vanquished—Aciloe’s father is made a prisoner, and Zamor is supposed to have fallen in the engagement—Alphonso becomes enamoured of Aciloe—offers to marry her; she rejects him—in revenge he puts her father to the torture—she appears to consent, in order to save him—meets Zamor in a wood—Las Casas joins them—leads the two lovers to Alphonso, and obtains their freedom—Zamor conducts Aciloe and her father to Chili—a reflection on the influence of Poetry over the human mind.
PE R U.

CANTO THE FIFTH.

IN this sweet scene, to all the virtues kind,
Mild Zamor own'd the richest gifts of mind;
For o'er his tuneful breast the heav'nly muse
Shed from her sacred spring, inspiring dews.
She loves to breathe her hallow'd flame, where art
Has never veil'd the soul, or warp'd the heart;

Where
Where fancy glows with all her native fire,
And passion lives on the exulting lyre.
Nature, in terror rob'd, or beauty dreft,
Could thrill with dear enchantment Zamor's breast: 10
He lov'd the languid sigh the zephyr pours,
He lov'd the murm'ring rill that fed the flow'rs;
But more the hollow found the wild winds form,
When black upon the billow hangs the storm;
The torrent rolling from the mountain steep, 15
Its white foam trembling on the darken'd deep—
And oft on Andes' height with eager gaze,
He view'd the sinking sun's reflected rays,
Glow like unnumber'd stars, that seem to rest
Sublime, upon his ice-encircled breast.
Oft his wild warblings charm'd the festal hour,
Rose, in the vale, and languish'd in the bower; 20
CANTO V.

The heart's responsive tones he well could move
Whose song was nature, and whose theme was love.

Aciloe's beauties his fond eye confess,
Yet more Aciloe's virtues warm'd his breast.
Ah stay, ye tender hours of young delight,
Suspend ye moments your impatient flight;
For sure if aught on earth can bliss impart,
Can shed the genuine joy that sooths the heart,
'Tis felt, when early passion's pure controul
Unfolds the first affections of the soul;
Bids her soft sympathies the bosom move,
And wakes the mild emotions dear to love.

The gentle tribe Aciloe's fire obey'd
Who still in wisdom, and in mercy sway'd.

From
From him the dear illusions long had fled,
That o'er the morn of life enchantment shed;
Yet virtue's calm reflections cheer'd his breast,
And life was joy serene, and death was rest.

Tho' sweet the early spring, her blossoms bright,
When first she swells the heart with pure delight,
Yet not unlovely is the sober ray
That meekly beams o'er autumn's temper'd day;

Dear are her fading beauties to the soul,
While scarce perceiv'd the deep'ning shadows roll.

Now the charm'd lovers dress their future years
In forms of joy, then weep delicious tears,
Expressive on the glowing cheek that hung,
And spoke the fine emotions whence they sprung—

'Twas
C A N T O V.

'Twas truth's warm energy, love's sweet control,
'Twas all that virtue whispers to the soul.
When lo, Iberia's ruthless sons advance,
Roll the stern eye, and shake the pointed lance.

Oh Nature! the destroying band oppose,
Nature, arrest their course—they come thy foes—
Benignant power, where thou with liberal care
Hast planted joy, they come to plant despair—
Peruvia's tribe beheld the hostile throng
With desolating fury pour along;

With horror their enfanguin'd path they trac'd,
And now to meet the murd'ring band they haste;
The hoary chief to the dire conflict leads
His death devoted train—the battle bleeds.
Aciloe's searching eye can now no more
The form of Zamor, or her sire explore;
She hears the moan of death in every gale,
She sees a purple torrent flain the vale;
While destin'd all the bitterness to prove
Of mourning duty, and of bleeding love,
Each name that's dearest wakes her buried sigh,
Throbs at her soul, and trembles in her eye.

Now, pierc'd by wounds, and breathless from the fight,

Her friend, the valiant Omar, struck her fight:

"Omar (the cried) you bleed, unhappy youth,
"And sure that look unfolds some fatal truth:
"Speak, pitying speak, my frantic fears forgive,
"Say, does my father; does my Zamor live?"
"All, all is lost, (the dying Omar said)"

"And endless griefs are thine, dear wretched maid;"

"I saw thy aged fire a captive bound,

"I saw thy Zamor press the crimson ground"—

He could no more, he yields his fleeting breath,

While all in vain she seeks repose in death,

But, oh, how far each other pang above

Throbs the wild agony of hopeless love;

That grief, for which in vain shall comfort shed

Her healing balm, or time in pity spread

The veil, that throws a shade o'er other care;

For here, and here alone, profound despair

Casts o'er the suffering soul a lasting gloom,

And slowly leads her victim to the tomb.

Now
Now rude tumultuous sounds assail her ear,
And soon Alphonso's victor train appear:
Then, as with ling'ring step he mov'd along,
She saw her father mid' the captive throng;
She saw with dire dismay, she wildly flew,
Her snowy arms around his form she threw:

"He bleeds (she cries) I hear his moan of pain,
My father will not bear the galling chain;
My tender father will his child forsake,
His mourning child, but soon her heart will break.
Cruel Alphonso, let not helpless age
Feel thy hard yoke, and meet thy barb'rous rage;
Or, oh, if ever mercy mov'd thy soul,
If ever thou haft felt her blest controul,
Grant my sad heart's desire, and let me share
The load, that feeble frame but ill can bear."

While
While the young victor, as the sult’ring spoke,
With fix’d attention, and with ardent look,
Hung on her tender glance, that love inspires,
The rage of conquest yields to milder fires.
Yet, as he gaz’d enraptur’d on her form,
Her virtues awe the heart her beauties warm;
And, while impassion’d tones his love reveal,
He asks with holy rites his vows to seal—

"Hop’st thou, she cried, those sacred ties shall " join
" This bleeding heart, this trembling hand to
" thine?
" To thine, whose ruthless heart has caus’d my " pains,
‘Whose barb’rous hands the blood of Zamor
" stains!

" Canst
"Canst thou—the murd'rer of my peace, control

"The grief that swells, the pang that rends my "soul?

"That pang shall death, shall death alone remove,

"And cure the anguish of despairing love."

In vain th' enamour'd youth essay'd each art

To calm her sorrows, and to soothe her heart;

While, in the range of thought, her tender breast
Could find no hope, on which her griefs might rest.

While her soft soul, which Zamor's image fills,

Shrinks from the cruel author of its ills.

At length to madness flung by fix'd disdain,

The victor gives to rage the fiery rein;

And bids her sorrows flow from that fond source

Where strong affection feels their keenest force,
C A N T O V.

Whose breast, when most it suffers, only heeds
The sharper pangs by which another bleeds:
For now his cruel mandate doom'd her fire
Stretch'd on the bed of torture, to expire;
Bound on the rack, unmov'd the victim lies,
Sighing in agony weak nature's sighs.

But oh, what form of language can impart
The frantic grief that wrung Aciloe's heart,
When to the height of hopeless sorrow wrought,
The fainting spirit feels a pang of thought,
Which never painted in the hues of speech,
Lies at the soul, and mocks expression's reach!

At length she trembling cried, "the conflict's o'er,
"My heart, my breaking heart can bear no more—
"Yet spare his feeble age—my vows receive,
"And oh, in mercy, bid my father live!"—

"Wilt
"Wilt thou be mine?" the enamour'd chief replies,
"Yes, cruel! see, he dies, my father dies—
"Save, save, my father"—"Dear, angelic maid,
"The charm'd Alphonso cried, be swift obey'd:
"Unbind his chains—Ah, calm each anxious
"pain,
"Aciloe's voice no more shall plead in vain;
"Plac'd near his child, thy aged sire shall share
"Our joys till cherish'd by thy tender care—
"No more (she cried) will fate that bliss allow,
"Before my lips shall breathe the nuptial vow,
"Some faithful guide shall lead his aged feet,
"To distant scenes that yield a safe retreat;
"Where some soft heart, some gentle hand, w
"shed
"The drops of comfort on his hoary head—"
"My Zamor, if thy spirit trembles near,
"Forgive!"—she ceas'd, and pour'd her hopeless tear.

Now night descends, and steep's each weary breast,
Saw sad Aciole's, in the balm of rest.
Her aged father's beauteous dwelling stood
Near the cool shelter of a waving wood:
But now the gales that bend its foliage die,
Soft on the silver turf its shadows lie;
While, slowly wand'ring o'er the scene below,
The gazing moon look'd pale as silent woe.
The hallowed shade, amid whose fragrant bowers
Zamor oft sooth'd with song the evening hours,
Soard to the lunar orb, his magic lay,
More mild, more pensive than her musing ray,
That shade with trembling step, the mourner sought,
And thus she breath'd her tender, plaintive thought.

"Ah where, dear object of these piercing pains,
Where rests thy murder'd form, thy lov'd remains;"
"On what sad spot, my 'Zamor, flow'd the wound
That purpled with thy streaming blood the ground;"
"Oh had Aciloe in that hour been nigh,
Hadst thou but fix'd on me thy closing eye;
Told with faint voice, 'twas death's worst pang
to part,
And dropp'd thy last, cold tear upon my heart;"

"A pang less bitter then would waste this breast,
That in the grave alone shall seek its rest.
Soon as some friendly hand, in mercy leads
My aged father, safe to Chili's meads;"
CANTO V.

"Death shall for ever, seal the nuptial tie,

"The heart belov'd by thee is fix'd to die."

She ceas'd, when dimly thro' a flood of tears

She sees her Zamor's form, his voice she hears.—

"Tis he, she cried, he moves upon the gale,

"My Zamor's sigh is deep—his look is pale—

"I faint"—his arms receive her sinking frame,

He calls his love by every tender name,

He fans her fleet ing spirit—life anew

Warms her cold cheek—his tears her cheek be-dew—

"Thy Zamor lives, he cried: as on the ground

"I senseless lay, some child of pity bound

"My bleeding wounds, and bore me from the

"plain—

"But thou art lost, and I have liv'd in vain."

G

"Forgive,
"Forgive, she cried, in accents of despair,

"Zamor forgive thy wrongs, and oh forbear

"The mild reproach that fills thy mournful eye,

"The tear that wets thy cheek—I mean to die! 210

"Could I behold my aged fire endure

"The pains his wretched child had power to cure!

"Still, still my father, stretch'd in death, I see,

"His grey locks trembling, as he gaz'd on me:

"My Zamor, soft—breathe not so loud a sigh— 215

"Some list'ning ear may pity less deny

"This parting hour—hark, sure some step I hear,

"Zamor again is lost—for now 'tis near"

She pause'd, when sudden from the sheltering wood

A venerable form before them stood:

"Fear not, soft maid, he cry'd, nor think I come

"To seal with deeper mysteries thy doom;"
To bruise the breaking heart that sorrow rends,
Ah not for this Las Casas hither bends—
He comes to bid those rising sorrows cease,
To pour upon thy wounds the balm of peace.
I rov'd with dire Almagro's ruthless train
Thro' scenes of death, to Chili's verdant plain;
Their wish, to bathe that verdant plain in gore,
Then from its bosom drag the golden ore;
Bat mine, to check the stream of human blood,
Or mingle drops of anguish with the flood.
When from those fair unconquer'd vales they fled,
This frame was stretch'd upon the languid bed
Of pale disease: when helpless, and alone,
The Chilese spy'd their friend, the murd'rors gone,
With eager fondness round my couch they drew,
And my cold hand with gushing tears bedew;

G 3

By
By day, they soothe my pains with sweet delight,

And give to watchings the chill hours of night;

For me their tender spirits joy to prove

The cares of pity, and the toils of love.

Soon as I heard, that o'er this gentle scene,

Where peace and virtue mingled smile serene,

The foe, like clouds that fold the tempest, hung,

I hither flew, my breast with anguish wrung.

A Chilené band the pathless desert trac'd,

And softly bore me o'er its dreary waste;

Then parting, at my feet they bend, and clasp

These aged knees—my soul yet feels their grasp.

Now o'er the vale with painful step I stray'd,

And reach'd the sheltering grove; there, hapless

maid,
CANTO V.

"My listening ear has caught thy piercing wail,
"My heart has trembled to thy moving tale."—
"And art thou he! the mournful pair exclaim,
"How dear to misery's soul, Las Cafas' name!
"Spirit benign, who every grief can share,
"Whose pity stoops to make the wretch its care;
"Weep not for us—in vain thy tear shall flow
"For hopeless anguish, and distracting woe”—

They ceas'd, in accents mild, the faint returns,
"Yet let me soothe the pains my bosom mourns:
"Come, gentle sufferers, follow to yon sane,
"Where relts Alphonso, with his victor train;
"My voice shall urge his soul to gen'rous deeds,
"And bid him hear, when truth, and nature pleads."

While in soft tones, Las Cafas thus exprest
His pious purpose, o'er Aciloe's breast

G 4 A dawn-
A dawning ray of cheering comfort streams,
But faint the hope that on her spirit beams;
Faint, as when ebbing life must soon depart,
The pulse that trembles, while it warms the heart.

Before Alphonso now the lovers stand;
The aged sufferer join'd the mournful band;
While with the look that guardian seraphs wear,
When sent to calm the throbs of mortal care,
The story of their woes Las Casas told,
Then cry'd, "the wretched Zamor here behold—"
"Hop't thou, fond man, a passion to controul"
"Fix'd in the breast, and woven in the soul?"
"But know, mistaken youth, thy power in vain"
"Would bid thy victim in the nuptial chain:
"
That faithful heart will rend the galling tie,
That heart will break, that tender form will die—
Then by each sacred name to nature dear;
By her strong shriek, her agonizing tear;
By every horror bleeding passion knows,
By the wild glance that speaks her frantic woes;
By all the wafting pangs that rend her breast,
By the deep groan that gives her spirit rest!
Let mercy's pleading voice thy bosom move,
And fear to burst the bonds of plighted love"—
He paus'd—now Zamor's moan Alphonso hears,
Now sees the cheek of age bedew'd with tears:
Pale, and motionless, Aciloe stands.
Fix'd was her mournful eye, and clasped her hands;
Her heart was chill'd—her trembling heart, for there
Hope slowly sinks in cold, and dark despair.
Alphonso's soul was mov'd—"No more, he cried,

"My hapless flame shall hearts like yours divide. 300

"Live, tender spirit, soft Aciloe, live,

"And all the wrongs of mad'ning rage forgive.

"Go from this desolated region far,

"These plains, where av'rice spreads the waste of war;

"Go, where pure pleasures gild the peaceful scene; 325

"Go where mild virtue sheds her ray serene."

In vain th' enraptur'd maid would now impart,

The rising joy that swells, that pains her heart;

Las Casas' feet in floods of tears she steeps,

Looks on her fire and smiles, then turns, and weeps;

Then smiles again, while her flush'd cheek reveals

The mingled tumult of delight she feels.
C A N T O V.

So fall the crystal showers of fragrant spring,
And o'er the pure, clear sky, soft shadows fling;
Then paint the drooping clouds from which they flow
With the warm colours of the lucid bow.

Now, o'er the barren desert, Zamor leads
Aciloe, and her fire, to Chili's meads:
There, many a wand'ring wretch, condemn'd to roam

By hard oppession, found a sheltering home:
Zamor to pity, tun'd the vocal shell,
Bright'ning the tear of anguish, as it fell.

Did o'er the human bosom throb with pain
The heav'nly muse has sought to sooth in vain?
The she, who can still with harmony its sighs,
And wake the sound, at which affliction dies;
Can bid the stormy passions backward roll,
And o'er their low-hung tempests lift the soul;
With magic touch paint nature's various scene
Wild on the mountain, in the vale serene:

Can tinge the breathing rose with brighter bloom,
Or hang the sombreous rock in deeper gloom;
Explore the gem, whose pure, reflected ray
Throws o'er the central cave a paler day;

Or soaring view the comet's fiery frame
Rush o'er the sky, and fold the sphere in flame;
While the charm'd spirit, as her accents move,
Is wrapt in wonder, or dissolv'd in love.
PERU.

CANTO THE SIXTH.
The Argument.

The troops of Almagro and Alphonso meet on the plains of Cuzco—Manco-Capac attacks them by night—his army is defeated, and he is forced to fly with its scattered remains—Cora goes in search of him—her infant in her arms—overcome with fatigue, she rests at the foot of a mountain—an earthquake—a band of Indians fly to the mountains for shelter—Cora discovers her husband—their interview—her death—he escapes with his infant(14,57),(984,989)

Almagro claims a share of the spoils of Cuzco—his contention with Pizarro—the Spaniards destroy each other—Almagro is taken prisoner, and put to death—his soldiers, in revenge, assassinate Pizarro in his palace—Las Casas dies—Gasca, a Spanish ecclesiastic, arrives in Peru—invested with great power—his virtuous conduct—the annual festival of the Peruvians—their late victories over the Spaniards in Chili—a wish for the restoration of their liberty—the Poem concludes.
PERU.

CANTO THE SIXTH.

At length Almagro, and Alphonso's train,
Each peril past, unite on Cuzco's plain:
Cesar, who now beheld with anxious woe,
Th' increasing numbers of the powerful foe,
Resolves to pierce beneath the shroud of night
Th. hostile camp, and brave the vent'rous fight;

Tho'
Tho' weak the wrong'd Peruvians arrowy showers,
To the dire weapons Iberia pours.
Fierce was th' unequal contest, for the soul
When rais'd by some high passion's strong control,
New strings the nerves, and o'er the glowing frame
Breathes the warm spirit of heroic flame.

But from the scene where raging slaughter burns,
The timid muse with pallid horror turns:
The sounds of frantic woe she panting hears,
Where anguish dims a mother's eye with tears;
Or where the maid, who gave to love's soft power
Her faithful spirit, weeps the parting hour:
And ah, till death shall ease the tender woe,
That soul must languish, and those tears must flow;
For never with the thrill that rapture proves shel bliss’d affection hail the form she loves;
Her eager glance no more that form shall view,
Her quivering lip has breath’d the last adieu!
Now night, that pour’d upon her hollow gale
The moan of death, withdrew her mournful veil;
The sun rose lovely from the sleeping flood,
And morning glitter’d o’er the field of blood;
Where bath’d in gore, Peruvia’s vanquish’d train
Lay cold and senseless on the sanguine plain.
Capac, their gen’rous chief, whose ardent soul
Had fought the rage of battle to controul,
B’held with keen despair his warriors yield,
And fled indignant from the conquer’d field.
From Cuzco now a wretched throng repair,
Who tread mid’ slaughter’d heaps in mute despair,
O’er-
O'er some lov'd corse the shroud of earth to spread,
And drop the sacred tear that sooths the dead:
No shriek was heard, for agony suppress'd
The fond complaints which ease the swelling breast:
Each hope for ever lost, they only crave
The deep repose which wraps the she'lt'ring grave.
So the meck Lama, lur'd by some decoy
Of man, from all his unembitter'd joy;
Ere while, as free as roves the wand'ring breeze,
Meets the hard burden on his bending knees.*

* The Lama's bend their knees and stoop their body in such a manner as not to discompose their burden. They move with a slow but firm pace, in countries that are impractical to other animals. They are neither dispirited by fatigue nor discouragement, while they have any strength remaining; but, when they are totally exhausted, if they fall under their burden, it is to no purpose to harrow and beat them; they will continue striking their heads on the ground, first on one side, then on the other, till they kill themselves.—Abbé Rigaud.

History of the European Settlements.
O'er rocks, and mountains, dark, and waste he goes,
Nor shuns the path where no soft herbage grows;
Till worn with toil, on earth he prostrate lies,
Heeds not the barb'rous lash, but patient dies.

Swift o'er the field of death sad Cora flew,
Her infant to his mother's bosom grew;
She seeks her wretched lord, who fled the plain
With the last remnant of his vanquish'd train:
That lone vale, or forest's sombre shade
A dreary solitude, the mourner stray'd;
Her timid heart can now each danger dare,
Her drooping soul is arm'd by deep despair—
Long, long she wander'd, till oppress'd with toil,
Her trembling footsteps track with blood the soil;
In vain with means her distant lord she calls,
In vain the bitter tear of anguish falls.
Her moan expires along the desert wood,
Her tear is mingled with the crimson flood.

Where o'er an ample vale a mountain rose,
Low at its base her fainting form she throws;
"And here, my child, (she cried, with panting breath)
"Here let us wait the hour of lingering death:
"This famish'd bosom can no more supply
"The streams that nourish life, my babe must die!
"In vain I strive to cherish for thy sake
"My failing strength; but when my heart-firing
"break,
"When my chill'd bosom can no longer warm,
"My stiff'ning arms no more enfold thy form,
CANTO VI.

"Soft on this bed of leaves my child shall sleep,
Close to his mother's corse he will not weep:
Oh weep not then, my tender babe, tho' near,
I shall not hear thy moan, nor see thy tear;
Hope not to move me by thy piercing cry,
Nor seek with searching look my answering eye."

As thus the dying Cora's plaints arose,
O'er the fair valley sudden darkness throws
A hideous horror; thro' the wounded air
Heard the shrill voice of nature in despair;
The birds dart screaming thro' the fluid sky,
And dash'd upon the cliff's hard surface die;
High o'er their rocky bounds the billows swell,
Then to their deep abyss affrighted fell;

Earth
Earth groaning heaves with dire convulsive throws,
While yawning gulphs her central caves disclose:
Now rush'd a frighted throng with trembling pace
Along the vale, and sought the mountain's base;
Purpos'd its perilous ascent to gain,
And shun the ruin low'ring o'er the plain.
They reach'd the spot where Cora clasp'd her child,
And gaz'd on present death with aspect mild;
They pitying pause'd—she lifts her mournful eye,
And views her lord!—he hears his Cora's sigh—
He meets her look—their melting souls unite,
O'erwhelm'd, and agoniz'd with wild delight—
At length she faintly cried, "we yet must part!
" Short are these rising joys—I feel my heart,
C A N T O VI.

"My suff'ring heart is cold, and mists arise
That shroud thy image from my closing eyes:
Oh save my child!—our tender infant save,
And shed a tear upon thy Cora's grave"—
The fluttering pulse of life now ceas'd to play,
And in his arms a pallid corse she lay:
O'er her dear form he hung in speechless pain,
And still on Cora call'd, but call'd in vain;
Scarce could his soul in one short moment bear
The wild extreme of transport, and despair.

Now o'er the west in melting softness streams
A morn, milder than the morning beams;
A purer dawn dispell'd the fearful night,
And nature glow'd in all the blooms of light;
Vol. II.

The
The birds awake the note that hails the day,
And spread their pinions in the purple ray;
A zone of gold the wave's still bosom bound,
And beauty shed a placid smile around.

Then, first awaking from his mournful trance,
The wretched Capac cast an eager glance
On his lov'd babe; th' unconscious infant smil'd,
And showers of softer sorrow bath'd his child.

The hollow voice now sounds in fancy's ear,
She sees the dying look, the parting tear,
That fought with anxious tenderness to save
That dear memorial from the closing grave:

He clasps the object of his love's last care,
And vows for him the load of life to bear;
To rear the blossom of a faded flower,
And bid remembrance sooth each lingering hour.
He journey'd o'er a dreary length of way,
To plains where freedom shed her hallow'd ray;
O'er many a pathless wood, and mountain hoar,
To that fair clime her lifeless form he bore.
Ye who ne'er suffer'd passions hopeless pain,
Deem not the toil that sooths its anguish vain;
Its fondness to the mould'ring corse extends,
Its faithful tear with the cold ashes blends.
Perchance, the conscious spirit of the dead
Numbers the drops affection loves to shed;
Perchance a sigh of holy pity gives
To the sad bosom, where its image lives.
Oh nature! sure thy sympathetic ties
Shall o'er the ruins of the grave arise;
Undying spring from the relentless tomb,
And shed, in scenes of love, a lasting bloom.
Not long Iberia's fullied trophies wave,
Her guilty warriors press th' untimely grave;
For av'rice, rising from the caves of earth,
Wakes all her savage spirit into birth;
Bids proud Almagro feel her baleful flame,
And Cuzco's treasures from Pizarro claim:
Pizarro holds the rich alluring prize,
With firmer grasp, the fires of discord rise.
Now fierce in hostile rage, each warlike train
Purple with issuing gore Peruvia's plain;
There, breathing hate, and vengeful death they flood,
And bath'd their impious hands in kindred blood;
While pensive on each hill, whose lofty brow
O'erhung with fable woods the vale below;
Peruvia's hapless tribes in scatter'd throngs,
Beheld the fiends of strife avenge their wrongs.

Now
C A N T O VI.

New conquest, bending on her crimson wings, 165
Her sanguine laurel to Pizarro brings;
While bound, and trembling in her iron chain,
Almagro swells the victor's captive train.

In vain his pleading voice, his suppliant eye,
Conjure his conqueror, by the holy tie 170
That seal'd their mutual league with sacred force,
When first to climes unknown they bent their course;
When danger's rising horrors low'd afar,
The storms of ocean, and the toils of war,
The sad remains of wasted life to spare, 175

The shrivell'd bosom, and the silver'd hair:—
But vainly from his lips these accents part,
Nor move Pizarro's cold, relentless heart,
That never trembled to the sufferer's sigh,
Or view'd the sufferer's tear with melting eye. 180

H 3

Almagro
Almagro dies—the victor’s savage pride
To his pale corse funereal rites denied.
Chill’d by the heavy dews of night it lay,
And wither’d in the sultry beam of day,
Till Indian boforms, touch’d with gen’rous woe,
In the pale form forgot the tyrant foe;
The last sad duties to his ashes paid,
And soothing’d with pity’s tear the hover’ing shade.
With unrelenting hate the conqu’ror views
Almagro’s band, and vengeance still pursues;
Condemns the victims of his power to stray
In drooping poverty’s chill, thorny way;
To pine with famine’s agony severe,
And all the ling’ring forms of death to fear;
Till by despair impell’d, the rival train
Rush to the haughty victor’s glitt’ring fane;
Swift
Swift on their foe with rage impetuous dart,
And plunge their daggers in his guilty heart.
How unavailing now the treasur'd ore
That made Peruvia's riddle bosom poor?
He falls—no mourner near to breathe a sigh,
Catch the last breath, and close the languid eye;
Deferted, and refus'd the holy tear
That warm affection sheds o'er virtue's bier;
Denied those drops that stay the parting breath,
That soothe the spirit on the verge of death;
Tho' now the pale expiring form would buy
With Andes' glitt'ring mines, one faithful sight!

Now faint with virtue's toil, Las Casas' soul
Sought with exulting hope, her heav'nly goal:
A bending angel consecrates his tears,
And leads his kindred mind to purer spheres.
But, ah! whence pours that stream of lambent light,
That soft-descending on the raptur'd sight,
Gilds the dark horrors of the raging storm—
It lights on earth—mild vision! gentle form—
'Tis Sensibility! she stands confest,
With trembling step she moves, and panting breast;
Wav'd by the gentle breath of passing sighs
Loose in the air her robe expanded flies;
Wet with the dew of tears her soft veil stream'd,
And in her eye the ray of pity beams;
No vivid roses her mild cheek illum'd,
Sorrow's wan touch has chase'd the purple bloom:
Yet lingering there in tender, pensive grace,
The softer lily fills the vacant place;
CANTO VI.

And ever as her precious tears bedew
Its modest flowers, they shed a paler hue.
To yon deserted grave, lo swift she flies
Where her lov'd victim, mild Las Casas lies;
Light on the hallow'd turf I see her stand,
And slowly wave in air her snowy wand;
I see her deck the solitary haunt,
With chaplets twin'd from every weeping plant.
Its odours mild the simple vilet shed,
The shrinking lily hung its drooping head;
A moaning zephyr sigh'd within the bower,
And bent the yielding stem of every flower:
"Hither (she cried, her melting tone I hear
"It vibrates full on fancy's raptur'd ear)
"Ye gentle spirits whom my soul refines,
"Where all its animating lustre shines;

H 5

Ye
"Ye who can exquisitely feel the glow
"Whose soft suffusion gilds the cloud of woe;
"Warm as the colours varying Iris pours
"That tinge with streaming rays the chilling showers;
"Ye to whose yielding hearts my power endears
"The transport blended with delicious tears,
"The bliss that swells to agony the breast,
"The sympathy that robs the soul of rep
"Hither with fond devotion pensive come,
"Kiss the pale shrine, and murmur o'er the tomb;
"Bend on the hallow'd turf the tear-full eye
"And breathe the precious incense of a sigh.
"Las Casas' tear has moisten'd mis'ry's grave,
"His sigh has moan'd the wretch it fail'd to "Hear!
Canto VI.

"He, while conflicting pangs his bosom tear
"Has sought the lonely cavern of despair;
"Where desolate she fled, and pour'd her thought,
"To the dread verge of wild distraction wrought. 260
"While drops of mercy bath'd his hoary cheek,
"He pour'd by heav'n inspir'd its accents meek;
"In truth's clear mirror bade the mourner's view
"Pierce the deep veil which darkling error drew;
"And vanquish'd empire with a smile resign, 265
"While brighter worlds in fair perspective shine."—
She pause'd—yet still the sweet enthusiast bends
O'er the cold turf, and still her tear descends;
The ever-falling tears her beauties shroud,
Till flow she vanish'd in a fleecy cloud. 270
Mild Gafca now, the messenger of peace,
Suspends the storm, and bids the tumult cease.
Pure spirit! in Religion's garb he came,
And all his bosom felt her holy flame;
'Twas then her votaries glory, and their care
To bid oppression's harpy talons spare;
To bend the crimson banner he unfurled,
And shelter from his grasp a suffering world:
Gafca, the guardian minister of woe,
Bids o'er her wounds the balms of comfort flow.
While rich Potosi* rolls the copious tide
Of wealth, unbounded as the wish of pride;
His pure, unfurled soul with high disdain
For virtue spurns the fascinating bane;

* See a delightful representation of the incorruptible integrity of this Spaniard in Robertson's History of America.
C A N T O  V I.

Her seraph form can still his breast allure
Tho' dreft in weeds, the triumph'd to be poor—
Hopeless ambition's murders to restrain,
And virtue's wrongs, he sought Iberia's plain,
Without one mean reserve he nobly brings
A massive treasure, yet unknown to kings:
No purple pomp around his dome was spread
No gilded roofs hung glitt'ring o'er his head;
Yet peace with milder radiance deck'd his bower,
And crown'd with dearer joy life's evening hour;
While virtue whisper'd to his conscious heart
The sweet reflexion of its high desert.

Ah, meek Peruvia, still thy murmur'd sighs
Thy stifled groans in fancy's ear arise;

Sadd'ning
Sadd'ning she views thy desolated soul,
As flow the circling years of bondage roll,
Redeem from tyranny's oppresseive power
With fond affection's force, one sacred hour,
And consecrate its fleeting, precious space,
The dear remembrance of the past to trace.
Call from her bed of dust joy's buried shade;
She smiles in mem'ry's lucid robes array'd,
O'er thy creative scene* majestic moves,
And wakes each mild delight thy fancy loves.
But soon the image of thy wrongs in clouds
The fair and transient ray of pleasure shrouds;

* "O'er thy creative scene." The Peruvians have solemn days on which they assume their ancient dress. Some among them represent a tragedy, the subject of which is the death of Atahalipa. The audience, who begin with shedding tears, are afterwards transported into a kind of madness. It seldom happens in these festivals, but that some Spaniard is slain.—Abbe Raynal's History.
CANTO VI.

Far other visions melt thy mournful eye,
And wake the gushing tear, th’ indignant sigh;
There Ataliba’s sacred, murder’d form,
Sinks in the billow of oppression’s storm;
Wild o’er the scene of death thy glances roll,
And pangs tumultuous swell thy troubled soul;
Thy bosom burns, distraction spreads her flames,
And from the tyrant foe her victim claims.

But, lo! where burfting desolation’s night,
A sudden ray of glory cheers my sight;
From my fond eye the tear of rapture flows,
My heart with pure delight exulting glows:
A blooming chief of India’s royal race,
Whose soaring soul, its high descent can trace,
The flag of freedom rears on Chili's * plain,
And leads to glorious strife his gen'rous train:
And see Iberia bleeds! while vict'ry twines
Her fairest blossoms round Peruvia's shrines;
The gaping wounds of earth disclose no more
The lucid silver, and the glowing ore;
A brighter glory gilds the passing hour,
While freedom breaks the rod of lawless power:
Lo on the Andes' icy steep the glows,
And prints with rapid step th' eternal snows;
Or moves majestic o'er the desert plain,
And eloquently pours her potent strain.

* "On Chili's plain."—An Indian descended from the Inca's, late lately obtained several victories over the Spaniards, the gold mines have been for some time shut up; and there is much reason to hope, that these injured nations may recover the liberty of which they have been so cruelly deprived.

Still
CANTO VI.

Still may that strain the patriot's soul inspire,
And still this injur'd race her spirit fire.
O Freedom, may thy genius still ascend,
Beneath thy crest may proud Iberia bend;
While roll'd in dust thy graceful feet beneath,
Fades the dark laurel of her sanguine wreath;
Bend her red trophies, tear her victor plume,
And close insatiate slaughter's yawning tomb.
Again on soft Peruvia's fragrant breast
May beauty blossom, and may pleasure rest.
Peru, the muse that vainly mourn'd thy woes,
Whom pity robb'd so long of dear repose;
The muse, whose pensive soul with anguish wrung
Her early lyre for thee has trembling thrum;
Shed the weak tear, and breath'd the powerless sigh,
Which soon in cold oblivion's shade must die.

Pants
Pants with the will thy deeds may rise to fame,
Bright on some living harp's immortal frame!
While on the string of ecstasy, it pours
Thy future triumphs o'er unnumber'd shores.

D U N C A N,
DUNCAN,

AN ODE.

I.

A BASH'D the rebel squadrons yield—
Macbeth, the victor of the field,
Exulting, past the blasted wild;
And where his dark o'erhanging towers
Prownt on the heath, with pleasures mild
Now Duncan hastens to wing the hours—

Sweet
Sweet are the rosy beams that chase
The angry tempest from the sky;
When winds have shook the mountain’s base,
Sweet is the Zephyr’s balmy sigh;
But sweeter to the breast the social charms
Whole grateful rapture soothes the toil of arms.

II.

’Twas not the season when the storm,
Of winter wears its savage form;
Black’ning all the frozen north
Wildly spreads its awful wings,
From yon bare summit rushes forth
And on that barren desert, flings
All the rapid torrents might,
When with turbulence they sweep,
Mingling, with the winds of night,
Sounds majestically deep—
When nature form'd the hideous waste, she frown'd,
And gave to horror its deserted bound.

III.

'Twas not the hour when magic spells
Rock the heath's untrodden cells;
When flow the wither'd forms arise
From caves, which night with lasting sway,
Ever shrouds from mortal eyes,
Nor divides one hour with day—

Sounds
Sounds unmeet for mortal ear
Chill with dread the human frame;
Then unreal shapes appear
By the blue unhallow'd flame—
Discordance strange, disturbs the gentle air,
And pois'nous taints the thick'ning breezes bear.

IV.

The western sun's departing ray
Bright on the lofty torrents lay,
That threw the shadow's length'ning line
At solemn distance far below;
And where the gather'd clouds, recline
On yon dark cliff's terrific brow.
There stood a venerable seer,
Whose prophetic soul could trace
Distant ages hast'ning near,
And all that fill'd the unborn space—
The prophet gaz'd, with sudden frenzy fir'd,
Saw deeds undone, and spoke with lips inspir'd.

V.

"Hail Scotia's monarch! greatly brave,
Skill'd to conquer, charm'd to save!
Whose pitying hand inverts the lance,
And meekly drops the slacken'd bow;
Whose gracious eye with mercy's glance
Has ever gaz'd on human woe! —
Vol. II.  I  Macbeth,
"Macbeth, the castle gate unbar,
Macbeth, prepare the social board—
Haste, from rugged toils of war,
Haste, and hail thy sov'reign lord!—
With music be the genial banquet crown'd,
And bid thy vaulted roofs with joy rebound.

VI.

Ha!—dread visions hang in air!—
I see a bloody dagger glare—
Deeds that ask the gloom of night
Are imag'd in yon troubled sky—
Now a gleam of fatal light
Flashes on my aching eye!
Duncan, shun that conscious tower—

Fiends the focial banquet pile!—

Murder waits the midnight hour,

Murder lurks in beauty's smile!

Vain my prophetic voice!—he hies away

Where, scowling o'er the couch, death calls his prey.—

VII.

"Sacred victim! bath'd in gore,

"Haunt the hideous scene no more—

"Rest, unquiet spirit, rest!

"Great revenge the heavens prepare;

"View thy murd'rer's tortur'd breast,

"And pity all that labours there!

I 2
"See the look, and hear the groan,
"Mark a bleeding soul in pain!
"Reason trembles on her throne,
"Furies seize the burning brain—
"Unpitied, and accursed shall be his doom,
"While rising honors flourish round thy tomb.

VIII.

"Thy mem'ry shall for ever last,
"And fame unтир'd, repeat the past—
"Deep in the mystic clouds of time
"I see a poet call'd to birth—
"I hear a lyre, whose force sublime
"With wonder thrills the listening earth!
"The mighty bard, with "potent art"
"Shall nature's perfect semblance give,
"Unlock the springs that move the heart,
"And bid the human passions live—
"Still in his heav'n taught page shall Duncan bleed,
"And future ages tremble as they read!

THE END.